Civil List Act (Ireland) 1793

Chapter 34

An Act for the Support of the Honour and Dignity of His Majesty's Crown in Ireland, and for granting to His Majesty a Civil List Establishment, under certain Provisions and Regulations.[1]

Ss.I–XIV rep. by SLR (I) 1879

XV.[2] AND whereas it is expedient to provide, that on the demise of his present Majesty, (whom God long preserve), a sum of money should at the end of every quarter, be set apart in the exchequer, equal to a sum which the whole of the hereditary duties heretofore granted, or payable to His Majesty, would amount to, in case the same had not been altered by any act this session of parliament, granting duties for one year, in lieu of all former duties, or shall not be altered by any act to be passed during the life of His Majesty, to be applied to the like purposes to which the same would be applicable, if this act had not been made; from and immediately after the demise of his present Majesty, (whom God long preserve,) the proper officers do compute the exact sum to which the whole of the said hereditary duties would amount, if the same had not been altered, and transmit an account thereof quarterly, into the receipt of the exchequer; and the proper officers at the receipt of the exchequer are hereby directed to set apart, out of the duties which shall compose the said consolidated fund, at the end of every quarter, from and immediately after the demise of his present Majesty, such a sum of money as it shall appear by such account, the whole of the said hereditary duties would have amounted to within such quarter respectively, and the same shall be paid to the successors of the King's majesty for ever hereafter, in lieu and for the like purposes of the several hereditary duties, which would be payable to his Majesty, his heirs and successors, if the same had not been altered.

On the demise of the King, the sum the hereditary duties would amount, if not altered, to be transmitted quarterly to treasury, and so much set apart out of consolidated fund for successors.
