the development of the regions and planned infrastructure investment in a purely general manner, as an essential precondition to regional development.

Most programmes give information on national infrastructure of regional importance.

3. Development measures

The programmes give information on regional policy measures in force, and in particular on regional aid schemes.

As far as the timing of infrastructure investment is concerned most programmes give precise information.

However, the programmes do not indicate clearly the priority rating of the many measures mentioned.

4. Financial resources

The programmes generally contain information as to the total financial resources available for regional development during the programme period, as well as information on an annual basis as to financial resources for infrastructure investment. However, this information is not always given in an individual format to the ERDF regions.

Some programmes contain information on financial transfers between different levels of government, notably on finance from regional or subregional sources.

5. Implementation

The programmes give detailed information on agencies or institutions responsible for the management of the programmes.

By the way of conclusion, the second generation programmes taken as a whole represent a substantial improvement on those for the preceding period. They enable investment projects submitted by the Member States for ERDF assistance to be assessed under more favourable conditions.

However, the Commission considers that a more precise definition of priorities would facilitate coordination of the pattern and priorities of Community and national regional policies and the management of the ERDF in relation to the choice of measures to be financed in common.

The Commission intends to undertake with each Member State an annual examination of projects and programmes which are eligible for cofinancing by the Community within the framework of priorities defined on the basis of the regional development programmes.
