7. Policy background

- What is being done and why

7.1 The National College for High Speed Rail is part of a wider programme to create a new set of employer-led Further Education institutions to meet identified gaps in the delivery of higher level technical skills for a particular industry or sector. The National College for High Speed Rail will deliver the skills needed for HS2 and other major rail projects, and will set industry standards for training within the sector based on emerging technology and innovation. It will operate from two sites: one at Birmingham science-park (Venture Way, Dartmouth Middleway, Birmingham B7 4AP), and one at Doncaster's Lakeside campus (Carolina Way, Lakeside, Doncaster DN4 5PN).

7.2 The majority of students attending the college will be aged 19 and over, including adults who are already in the workforce and looking to further develop their skills, as well as younger learners who are following a progression route from school or college. In steady state, it is expected that the college will have over 2000 full time students across the two sites, of which approximately one third will be part time and two thirds full time. This equates to around 700-800 new starts per year.

7.3 The college is expected to open its doors to students in September 2017.

8. Consultation outcome

8.1 An open consultation took place in 2014 in relation to the location of the new further education college. No responses were received opposing the proposal to establish the new institution.
