EXPLANATORY NOTE

(This Note is not part of the Regulations, but is intended to indicate their general purport.)

Regulation 41 of the School Premises (Standards and General Requirements) (Scotland) Regulations 1959 divides the total building costs of new schools and of extensions of existing schools into " common costs " and " special costs ". " Common costs " are defined in such a way as to include the cost of all building and civil engineering operations which are common to all such buildings. The Regulation as now amended provides that the common costs of any building shall not exceed the product of £3 18s. 9d. and the number of square feet comprising the total area of the buildings, save in cases in which the Secretary of State is satisfied that exceptional circumstances exist which justify a higher figure.
