EXPLANATORY NOTE

(This Note is not part of the Regulations, but is intended to indicate their general purport.)

The Regulations consolidate, with amendments, the Police Pensions (Scotland) Regulations, 1948, and the Police Pensions (Scotland) (Amendment) Regulations, 1948, which are revoked by Regulation 84, except in relation to deaths or retirements before the 1st July, 1949, when the new Regulations come into force. In these cases the old Regulations apply subject to the amendments in the Appendix, which provide in certain circumstances for awards to widows and children being increased.

The main changes are as follows. Regulations 10 and 11 increase a widow's ordinary pension. Regulation 13 gives the police authority discretion to increase a widow's special pension. Regulations 20 and 22 provide for increased child's ordinary allowance. Regulation 30 includes service under 20 years of age as pensionable service. Regulation 39 reduces the rate of pension contributions for a woman member of a police force. The awards dealt with in the First, Second and Third Schedules are to be calculated on three years' average pensionable pay instead of pensionable pay: but Regulation 59 provides that awards to or in respect of certain persons (including a person who is serving on the 1st July, 1949) who die or retire within three years of that date shall not be less than they would have been if calculated in accordance with the revoked Regulations and with reference to scales of pay in force before that date: and Regulation 83 provides that awards to or in respect of a person serving on the 1st July, 1949, who does not otherwise elect, shall be calculated on pensionable pay and not on average pensionable pay; it also makes special provision for calculating an ordinary pension where a person who was serving in a police force on the 28th August, 1921, is compelled to retire on grounds of age within three years after the 1st July, 1949.
