and compensation to those who are adversely affected by the past or future operation of the Act of 1947 or by the compulsory acquisition of their land. Regulation 14 deals with those who have paid development charge and Regulations 15, 16 and 17 with those who disposed of their minerals while the provisions of the Act of 1947 were fully effective: special arrangements are made, in the case of land subject to a mining lease, to take account of the shifting of development value between lessor and lessee. Somewhat similar provisions are made by Regulation 20 in relation to the compulsory acquisition of land subject to a mining lease, after the coming into operation of the Act of 1954. Regulation 21 provides the same protection for a lessee under a mining lease as is obtainable by a purchaser of land under Section 34 of the Act of 1954, in relation to a subsequent compulsory acquisition of the land. Regulation 22 deals with compensation for disturbance, severance and injurious affection on the acquisition of mineral bearing land. Regulation 23 provides against the possibility of double compensation being payable in respect of past planning decisions and also deals with the division of the compensation payable under Part V of the Act of 1954 where shifts of development value have occurred under a mining lease.
